CIVIL-MILITARY COOPERATION IN MODERN UKRAINE: THE NECESSITY OF IMPROVEMENT

The article is devoted to the study of civil-military cooperation in modern Ukraine. Some aspects of improvement of civil-military cooperation between military units and civilian population, in particular during peacekeeping operations, are considered. Modern changes in civil-military cooperation provide for the development of relations of internal and external character, represents a system of functional interrelations of both social and socio-political nature, is manifested in all spheres of public life between society and the Armed Forces on the implementation of the main important interests of society and the state, is considered in the context of ensuring state security. Understanding the necessity of establishing and maintaining cooperation between military and civilian components in the conflict zone ensures a rapid transition from atypical tasks and functions to the military, which, in turn, significantly increases the effectiveness of the implementation of military tasks. In such cases, communication takes place through coordination meetings, during citizens' appeals, etc. Thus, the main functional feature of civil-military administrations in the long run is the definition of powers aimed at ensuring the functioning of the Armed Forces of Ukraine in conditions of strengthening democracy and law.

Today, the role of socio-cultural factors is particularly important. For example, patriotism, statehood, public service as a spiritual alternative to corruption and criminalization of society. One of the main problems is the state administration of civil-military administrations, which perform functions, perform state administration bodies at the regional level and local self-government bodies in those territorial communities, which found themselves in the area of joint forces' operation.

Keywords: civil-military cooperation, civil society, interaction, anti-terrorist operation.
